Seasonal Savings Guide

Here are a few ways you can make some hidden savings each month.

January: The first month of the year is an ideal time to start fresh and kick off your brand new saving strategy. And, although it's mid-month, it's not too late to get started if you haven't done so yet. Get a handle on how much post-holiday debt you may have accumulated in December, and determine how to best pay that down.

February: Football and love are this month's buzzwords. In preparation for Super Bowl Sunday, retailers promote all things related, from chips & dip to 60-inch LEDs. Good news for you, football fan or not, there are deals to be had! Whether you're hosting a Super Bowl bash on February 1, just stocking up on snacks for your kids' lunches, or in the market for a new TV, this is a great time to do some bargain-hunting.

March: Did you think winter would never end? Well, there's a light at the end of the tunnel...literally. Daylight Saving Time will begin on March 13, 2022, and we'll finally be seeing more natural light, which means using less electricity. Speaking of winter coming to an end, spring merchandise is already hitting the racks. But it's still cold outside, and there are tons of clearance deals to be had on everything from sweaters and boots to snow shovels and sleds. Score some new gear to finish out the season or stock up for less for next year.
